The current is a meisture-loving fruit, hence for profit it should be planted in a cool, moist, but well-drained soil. It also requires rich soil, hence as a rule the best is a good clay loam which is retentive of moisture and cooler than sandy loam, says an expert in the Indiana Farmer. The soil should be thoroughly prepared for currents before planting. One-year-old plants from cuttings, if strong, will give good satisfaction, although two-year-old plants are not too old. They should be planted in rows about six feet apart, and from four to five feet apart in the
